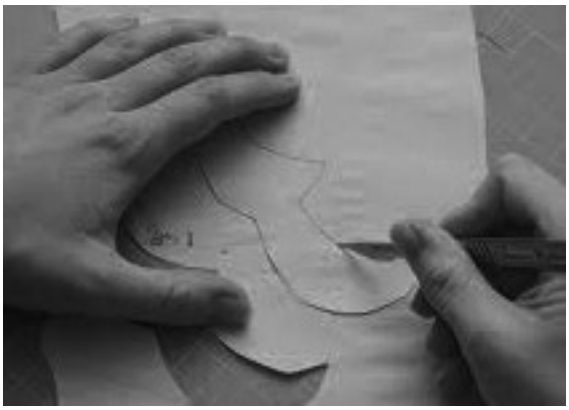
How to use this book

The stencils in this book are designed to be traced onto cardboard, tracing paper or old X-ray film, and the outline cut out with a craft-knife on either a cutting board or several layers of cardboard (can be recycled from an old carton). The cleaner and more accurate the cutting-out, the more precise and crisp the finished result. The illustrations can be first enlarged or reduced using a photocopier if desired.



One method of stencilling with smaller projects is by using a stencil brush.

These come in a variety of sizes and brushes have a flat end, They are designed to be used in a dabbing motion at a 90-degree angle to the stencil. This ensures minimum paint bleeding and gives a crisp finish to your stenciling.

Another method is to mask the surrounding area and use a can of spray paint or an air-brush.

For very large projects, copy the illustration onto overhead transparency film or similar and project the image onto the surface where you want the stencil, trace the outline and then fill in the detail with paint. Alternatively you can use a data projector or similar.

These stencils are all original and have been tested in real-life situations.

Artworks drawn from 1987 to 1989
